Complicit in Genocide

— Since 1895 —

Welcome to the London School of Egregious Investments and Apolitical Science

We celebrate the achievements of LSE students on the 435th day of the active genocide in Palestine. We walk the stage today in honor of all those martyred, and with solemn recognition of the complicity of our own institution in their deaths.

The students we are here to celebrate have not only excelled as academics this past year, but have undertaken their Master's studies during an ongoing genocide. As students, we have all taken rhetorical stances that criticise injustice in the interest of creating a better world.

However, we have come to learn that discourse is worthless if not backed by action, and our degrees mean nothing if they do not enable us to challenge systems of power.

Amidst our present context, one brought on by the destruction, death, and hate of genocide, our students launched the LSE Liberated Zone on 14 May 2024. In those 34 days we created a space where strangers turned into family. The encampment was an experience of love, joy, collaboration, inspiration, passion, drive, and pure genius. We felt our grief as a collective and we felt our power as a collective. It was a space where academics and action came together, a space one could only dream of. The students and staff that worked and lived there did so for weeks on end with many sleepless nights; yet, our participation was not a sacrifice. It was a gift, a privilege of purpose and clarity.

As the world watched children burn alive.

History has its eyes on us all

The LSE Liberated Zone was never merely a physical space. It is a symbolic protest, a fragile suspension of time, something that is always ending but never possible to stop. It is an act of existing as a thread of history while simultaneously sitting at the loom weaving the fabric. The LLZ will remain within us all for the rest of our lives.

The Class of 2024 now joins a rich legacy of LSE student activists. The LSE Liberated Zone renamed the building they occupied this year after Marshall Bloom, a former LSE student activist who was disciplined in 1967 alongside David Adelstein for their opposition to Rhodesian apartheid and apartheid in South Africa. LSE's decision to suspend Bloom and Adelstein led to the first student occupation in British history – which sparked the '60s student revolution at LSE and across Britain. We proudly join in LSE's tradition of resistance. From the suffragettes and Civil Rights activists to the fee strikers and the activists of tomorrow, our solidarity knows no bounds.

We graduate today in dedication to all of the students of Palestine who have not had the chance to learn. We walk this stage in remembrance of our martyrs. We leave LSE with the promise that we will intentionally seek...

to know the causes of things for the betterment of society

Free Palestine.

LSE Liberated Zone

LSE Class of 2024 joins A LINEAGE OF REVOLUTIONARIES

From being the heart of suffrage movement to the place of Britain's first student occupation, the history of activism at LSE is as old as the university itself.

Between 1906 and 1914, the offices of the Women's Social and Political Union (WSPU), the suffragette organisation led by Emmeline Pankhurst, were on the site now known as Pankhurst on LSE campus.

In the 1960's, the first student occupation in British history took place in the LSE Old Building. It began in response to the suspension of multiple students who opposed the appointment of incoming director Walter Adams, who had close connections to the white supremacist regime in Rhodesia. In 2000, Nelson Mandela visited and praised LSE for responding "to the call to isolate the apartheid regime."

This year, students at LSE channeled the revolutionary spirit of generations of student activists before them. On 14 May this year, students and staff occupied LSE's Marshall building for 35 days after publishing a 116-page report, 'LSE: Assets in Apartheid', which detailed the university's investments in companies fueling Israel's genocide of Palestinian people. LSE engaged in negotiations but refused to meet the core demand on divestment, becoming instead the first British university to evict an encampment with a controversial court order. LSE argued that by engaging in protest, students became trespassers, and despite having told the judge that negotiations would continue after eviction, the university abandoned negotiations within 24 hours.

This occupation did not begin in a vacuum. It took place with the explicit support of over 400 LSE staff and faculty members, alongside the unanimous UCU branch motion demanding divestment and support for an immediate ceasefire on 17 May. In addition to this, an alumni campaign was launched, with an open letter containing over 700 signatures, in a coordinated effort to show the widespread level of support and solidarity with student occupiers. A group of Jewish students and staff at the LSE also wrote an open letter in support of the encampment. Occupiers have also been grateful to receive material support from students and staff at LSE, in addition to the wider London and international community. The positive media attention that the encampment has received, and the report upon which it is premised, is a testament to the urgency and widespread support for our demands.

Wins at LSE in 2024

Historic turnout in favour of divestment at LSE Student Union

On June 4, LSE's student union held a referendum, asking: 'Should LSESU seek dialogue with LSE senior leadership to press for full and meaningful divestment from fossil fuels and weapons, including indirect investments?' Amid the largest turnout in the university's history (2584 total voters), the 'YES' vote won with 89% approval (2306 votes). With this mandate, LSE Students Union is actively campaigning for divestment.

ESG expedited review

As part of the negotiations between the LSE Liberated Zone and LSE's Senior Management Committee, LSE agreed to change and expand its Environment, Society and Governance (ESG) policy. LSE Council, the highest decision making body of the university, has explicitly acknowledged that the School may now "decide to change investment practices for reasons other than maximising financial returns," and announced its commitment to greater transparency in LSE's investments and an expedited review of its ESG policy. This is just the beginning. We are concerned that—while Council cited investment in fossil fuels and arms manufacture as areas for reconsideration in a revised ESG policy—conspicuous by its absence is any mention of investments in entities implicated in gross human rights violations, illegal activities, and/or internationally wrongful acts whether in Palestine, Israel, the Occupied Palestinian Territories or elsewhere.

LSE drops disciplinaries against pro-Palestinian protesters thanks to public support

After almost 5 months of continued pressure and collective organising, LSE has finally ended the draconian disciplinary investigations against seven of its students. The LSE 7 were preemptively reprimanded for protesting LSE's ties to apartheid. On 6 December, one student's case was dropped entirely and 6 others received a warning from the university. LSE had to reckon with the fact that students have a right to protest, even if they are protesting LSE's failure to divest. This victory for the anti-genocide movement on campus is a demonstration of what can happen when sustained pressure is placed on the administration and is an indication that divestment is a goal within our grasp.

Despite these wins and the strength of the movement for Palestinian liberation, LSE refuses to end its complicity with the active genocide. LSE still holds investment worth £48,515,817 in 80 holdings in 53 companies that are involved in crimes against the Palestinian people. This includes £5,310,537 of investments in 11 companies that are profiting from the genocide in Gaza, including Toyota (£2,261,650), General Motors (£1,434,427), BAE Systems (£877,282), Caterpillar (£233,452) and RTX (formerly Raytheon Technologies) (£120,042).

We continue to demand LSE:

1. Divest from all funds and companies linked to genocide
2. Support academic and cultural boycott of Israeli institutions
3. Designate educational resources to Palestinian children and academics
4. Dedicate funds to rebuild universities in Palestine in retribution of their financial complicity in their destruction
5. Platform Palestinian scholars

Sally Rooney, Rachel Kushner and Arundhati Roy call for boycott of Israeli cultural institutions

5,000 more writers have joined the boycott of complicit Israeli cultural institutions.

UK's biggest private pension fund dumps $100 million of Israeli assets, including Israel Bonds.

Chevron halts major expansion of Israeli-claimed gas field amid Israel's ongoing genocide against 2.3 million Palestinians in Gaza and its brutal bombings in Lebanon, Syria and beyond.

Part of the Global Student Intifada

In the face of threats and harassment from outside agitators and their own universities, students and other members of the academic community have made significant progress towards their goals. Trinity College Dublin and San Francisco State University have both divested assets from companies affiliated with the ongoing genocide in the past year, while the University of Johannesburg conceded to calls to end its academic relationship with Ben-Gurion University in Israel. Additionally, organizing by the University and College Union (UCU) was pivotal in pressuring USS, the UK's largest private pension fund, to divest over $100 million in Israeli assets.

The pressure on complicit universities is only mounting. In a poll conducted by the LSE Student Union, 89% of the LSE student body voted for divestment as outlined in the Assets in Apartheid report. The National Union of Students, representing 7 million students in the UK, has voted to endorse the BDS (Boycott, Divestment, Sanctions) Movement and BDS campaigns, joining national and local student unions in the United States, Canada, South Africa, Brazil, Chile, and Qatar.

Broader Movement Victories

The anti-genocide work happening on LSE's campus is a small piece of the larger political and economic campaign to dismantle the Israeli military machine, which has also seen notable victories. Most prominently, the International Court of Justice recently issued arrest warrants against Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and former Defense Minister Yoav Gallant, for perpetrating war crimes and crimes against humanity. This followed multiple displays of mass support among UN member nations for sanctions against Israel, and Colombia's independent decision to end all coal exports to Israel.

Domestically, we have seen UK institutions concede to the pressure placed on them by activists. In September, the UK government suspended 30 arms export licenses to Israel over concerns about its humanitarian violations in Gaza. A month later, a Bristol employment tribunal acknowledged that anti-Zionism is a protected belief, marking a significant win against forces attempting to repress solidarity with Palestine.

The effects of consumer boycotts have also been considerable: Puma ended its partnership with the Israel Football Association, and McDonald's has seen a global drop in sales for the first time in three years.

THERE ARE NO UNIVERSITIES LEFT IN GAZA

Israel destroyed Gaza's last remaining university in January 2024. As of April, 5,479 students, 261 teachers, and 95 professors had been killed in Gaza. Israel has directly hit over 200 schools since the genocide began, leaving over 660,000 children without access to education. Explosives have turned universities into rubble, and the dreams of countless young people lie buried beneath the ruins. They have also systematically attacked Gaza's cultural heritage, bombing over 200 historical sites including mosques, churches, libraries, and museums.

This is an assault not only on education, but at the heart of a society's future, robbing a generation of the chance to learn, grow, and rebuild. As Palestinian academic Karma Nabulsi noted, this suppression of education and academic freedom in Palestine are all part of a calculated effort to erase the Palestinian peoples' future. To label these acts as scholasticide is to not only decry the destruction of these physical spaces of learning, but to identify this as a campaign to eliminate the cultural and intellectual traditions of the Palestinian people.

LSE's investments make them complicit in Israel's genocide in Gaza.

Complicit in Scholasticide

LSE's investments enabled Israel's murder of thousands of students and teachers in Gaza, and the destruction of at least 60% of educational facilities, libraries, and museums.

A Statement from Our Comrade, Peer and Dear Friend

A kind, bright, hilarious soul, a lover of Barcelona FC, and a young man who is so much more than a refugee.

Hello, I am a refugee in my country. I was born in the Gaza Strip in 2003, my destiny tied to that of my land. I grew up surrounded by love in my family's orchard, now a nursing student of Al-Aqsa University.

I have been through several wars in my life until this moment. I lived my childhood, and most of my life in Gaza under siege. I have never left Palestine.

I did not get enough good and happy days. Those days have been numbered since my birth, because of the destructive violence I have lived through. My last year of high school was set against the backdrop of the 2021 Gaza War. I did not get good grades because of the war I went through, the uncertainty of the future was not a journey of discovery but a matter of life and death. Now, while I am writing this letter to you, I am living the harshest and ugliest days of my life, trapped within the brutality of genocide that I must bear witness to.

I am studying nursing and I have a dream of becoming a nurse in a good and safe place— while I am thinking about that, time goes back a little. I find that I have lost my university and it has been destroyed. I see that I have lost many university friends. I also see that I have lost many professors and teachers at the university. I see in the future that I will not have a graduation ceremony like many of you will have at this moment and that I will not complete my university education and achieve my dream of graduating and celebrating graduation with my family and friends.

I left my home, my memories, my dreams, and everything that concerns me in the house as I was forced to leave it. I left because the army 'evacuated' the neighborhood I live in and I fled with my family to an unknown place that we do not recognise.

I now live in a tent that is no more than three meters, I live with my family without food or clean water. We have nothing but the clothes we left the house with, the crossings are closed, there is no aid, there is no one to help us. This is my situation, the situation of every student, the situation of every person in Gaza. We live under genocide, starvation, bombing, massacres and killing. These are the worst nightmares of my life, horrors that none of you can imagine or see in a movie, something that the human mind cannot envision.

I hope that this message will be the beginning of an urgent and rapid move to help us. I hope that you have a wonderful celebration for the graduates and that you share your joy with the students of Palestine. I hope that you continue to raise the Palestinian flag as you work to demand change.

Thank you.

Please donate to the LSE Palestine Society PayPal so that we can help our friend's family and others like his. They are now spending their second winter in battered tents in the cold, the rain, and the bombs.

We ask that you use PayPal as GoFundMe has been holding funds indefinitely, and therefore cannot help us in our mission to save lives.

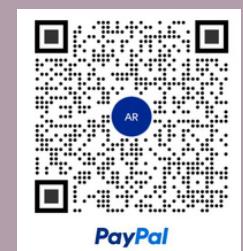

Many of our peers are unable to tell us about their story, let alone graduate. We mourn the martyrs of Palestine and denounce the complicity of the School administration in the ongoing genocide. The following pages remember only a small number of the lives lost.

Ayşenur Ezgi Eygi

Rachel Corrie

The Legacy Students Leave Behind

In March 2003, twenty-three-year-old Rachel Corrie from Olympia, WA, was repeatedly run over by an Israeli soldier driving a Caterpillar D9 bulldozer. She was wearing a neon traffic vest and peacefully defending a Palestinian home in Gaza from being destroyed, and was crushed to death. Israel investigated itself, found itself inconvenienced but inculpable, and the Bush administration left the issue alone.

Over two decades later, twenty-six-year-old Ayşenur Ezgi Eygi was shot in the head by Israeli forces while protesting the occupation in Nablus.

Israel has already called her death an accident, despite an autopsy finding the cause of her death was a sniper shot to the forehead. She was volunteering with the International Solidarity Movement (ISM), the same organization Rachel Corrie was part of when she was killed. Eygi was one of the organizers of the Liberated Zone encampment for Palestine on the University of Washington's Seattle campus, and graduated from UW in May 2024. Biden or Harris have yet to speak to Eygi's family.

In their names & in the name of every martyr: we'll see an end to state-sanctioned terror within our lifetime, from the river to the sea, from Turtle Island to Palestine.

Repression of Pro-Palestinian voices at LSE

It has been five months since seven members of the LSE community (dubbed the LSE 7) were banned from entering campus and participating in university activities for their alleged involvement in a pro-Palestinian protest that took place on campus on July 7th. After an unprecedented delay in the investigatory process, this week the School has privately communicated to the targeted students that it will not uphold any allegations against the one student who filmed the protest, and that it will drop all but one allegation against the other six students. Finally, the School issued these six students with a formal warning to be placed on their academic records.

The School wasted five months of time and resources investigating a 15-minute protest, which the School Secretary has now admitted did not amount to harassment. Meanwhile, the movement to end LSE's complicity in the ongoing genocide in Palestine and other egregious activities was forced to direct its energy towards the basic demand for freedom to protest on campus, allowing the School to deflect from the movement's primary goals of divestment and accountability to the student community—89% of whom voted in favour of divestment from egregious activities.

Perhaps believing the matter to be settled quietly and behind closed doors, LSE has made no formal statement in regards to the failures of this investigation, and the harm it has caused to the targeted students and the rest of the community. However, the students, staff, and faculty of LSE refuse to allow the School to hide from its misconduct. We condemn the fact that it took more than twice the length of the standard investigatory procedure (60 days) to announce a decision, despite frequent requests from the LSE 7 and their supporters for simple transparency as they navigated the massive upheaval caused to their lives on account of being barred from campus.

We condemn the School's reliance on Islamophobic and racially prejudiced witness statements in triggering the disciplinary procedure, which displays a deep ignorance of the institutional Islamophobia within university procedures as outlined by the LSESU Islamic Society's report released earlier this year.

In the wake of the investigatory process's conclusion, we wish to make one thing abundantly clear: LSE's decision to quietly end the judicial process by dropping nearly all charges against the LSE 7 is a blatant admission of the unjust nature of its actions. The termination of these charges is first and foremost a testament to the resilience of the seven students in the face of disgraceful treatment, but it is also a testament to the movement within and outside of the LSE community as they demanded justice and an end to student repression. LSE was called out for their repression by United Nations special rapporteurs, Amnesty International, CAGE International, MP Zarah Sultana and many more. LSE has revealed that now, more than ever, is the time to make our demands as loud as possible, because now is when we are at our strongest.

Our narrative is the greatest threat to LSE's illusion of academic freedom and excellence— their desperate acts of animosity towards their own students betrays the weakness behind their crusade of repression. Can LSE be' the top university in the UK for free speech' on a campus rampant with censorship, securitisation, and surveillance? Only if they can silence the voices that hold them accountable. The repression we face as members of such a privileged institution is a choice, an act of solidarity with the Palestinian people who have no such privilege of choice.

LSE wanted to break us, they tried to burn us out. But we have risen from the ashes of their torment ready to fight another day. We refuse to be intimidated.

I have been having private conversations with @LSEnews in which I reviewed its internal regulations pertinent to the past and current situation of students participating in the pro-Palestine solidarity movement.

Gina Romero ✅ @Ginitastar · Oct 7

I am concerned about information I received regarding stigmatization and reprisals that some students of the London School of Economics are facing for their participation in peaceful protests questioning university's investments that they consider are against HHRR @LSEnews

Francesca Albanese, UN Special Rapporteur oPt ✅ @FranceskAlbs

@LSE is one among many universities that have taken a dubious stance on Palestine. Does the university realize the gravity of the crimes committed there? Why not ensuring greater protection of its student body standing against Apartheid Israel? And why does it still maintain its ties with an Apartheid state?

This holiday season, the most impactful form of activism is to talk to friends and family. Mobilising them to join the movement can have a profound impact.

Join a local organising group, like a branch of the Palestine Solidarity Campaign.

Boycott.

Boycott, Divestment, Sanctions (BDS) is a Palestinian-led movement for freedom, justice and equality. Targeted consumer boycotts are convincing retailers across the world to stop selling products from companies profiting from Israel's crimes. Virtually all Israeli companies are complicit to some degree in Israel's system of occupation and apartheid. BDS focuses on a small number of companies and products for maximum impact.

You can stay informed about BDS strategies and join consumer-focused BDS campaigns more effectively via Boycat, an innovative ethical shopping platform and application. Through the app users can check regularly updated BDS targets, scan products, learn about companies, build your ethical shopping profile, join local teams and directly support our priority campaigns, ensuring your purchasing decisions contribute to a larger movement for justice.

Support the Graduates of today...
....the leaders of tomorrow

Your students have been fighting against repression and censorship for over a year now, fighting for the liberation of Palestine, for the rights and dignity of all oppressed people, and for the future of our planet.

As you likely know, we are a generation of students for whom activism in some form is a constant presence in our lives. This is not a phase. We will not stop demanding a better future for all. The risks we choose to take are only risks as long as we remain divided. They cannot repress us all. It is time for you to join us.

YOU have the power to help us change the world. The graduates you see today will be the leaders of tomorrow, they are coming into your industries ready to take creative paths and find new solutions. The knowledge you have of the institutions, systems, networks we hope to change is invaluable. Our collective strengths are the key to our collective liberation.

Join our coalition. Together we can free Palestine.
